Bath Tub Shower

Ordinary bath tub is constructed in a slant to permit of easy drainage from an under-care of occasional phlegm. Bathing also cleans and soothes, and is good for the nerves.

Cloth Bladed Fan

If you should stick your hand in the blades of this fan you would remain there for a simple reason that blades are made of cloth. They are just as effective as metal, but do not become entangled with the hair.

Novelty Waffle Iron

Waffles need no longer be made because of the difficulty in making them. The waffle iron which makes them is simple, elegant, and does not require any special skill.

Mooie online polls opzetten met SurveyGizmo - August 6, 2008

Het komt helaas maar al te vaak voor dat online enquêtes en polls vooral opvallen door een rommelige lay-out, een beperkt aantal antwoordmogelijkheden en een weinig transparant resultatenoverzicht. Ik begrijp niet waarom zoveel mensen zelf gaan zitten modderen met vragenlijsten en radio-buttons in HTML, terwijl er zoveel gratis tools beschikbaar zijn. Wie een beetje z'n best doet vindt er tientallen. PollDaddy is misschien wel een van de bekendste. Zelf heb ik er nog nooit mee gewerkt maar ik kom 'm wel vaak tegen op websites.LIB. Ik ben er zelf wel eens van gesproken en 't is een mannetje. PollDaddy heeft een gratis ac...

The People of Web 2.0

I have given dozens of presentations and led many discussions on web 2.0 for various audiences. In addition, I teach a 2-day workshop for the Kent State University School of Library & Information Science so that future librarians are not afraid to "play" in this user-generated social web environment. If you talk to anyone associated with one of my activities, I focus the discussions on people rather than the tools. I show the tools and the students play, but we also come back around to the user of the tool on the other end of the 'net. The tools come and go with no rhyme or reason, but the pull of people is driven by spec...

"Dr. Web Makes Many Americans Question Trusted Health Providers"
via davidrothman.net by David Rothman on 8/3/08

Interesting item.

Excerpts:

Thirty-eight percent of U.S. adults (or 85.6 million people) say they have doubted a medical professional's opinion or diagnosis because it conflicted with information they found online. However, despite the growing power of the Internet, the majority of Americans still view health providers as their most trusted source of medical information.

Previous research indicates that trust in Internet resources is not widespread. However, this study suggests credibility may be influenced by who is authoring the content. Thirteen percent of Americans say they would accept medical [07:51] pete: We were talking about first year undergrads.

[07:52] pete: And the issue of how much support we give versus how we encourage them to develop.
[07:52] Linda Shippert: As a young and voracious reader, I loved the idea of reading lists, and then when I got them I couldn't imagine reading any of the dusty old classics on them.
[07:52] pete: I think I also wanted a checklist so I could say, "Truly, I am great, for I have read all these books."
[07:53] CorpLibrarian: If it's posed as "suggested readings" with the clear understanding that people should branch out from those (and coaching on how to do so), I think that would be fine.
[07:53] CorpLibrarian: There is the concern that you're just ticking off boxes, yes.
[07:53] pete: We have "essential readings".
[07:53] pete: And the students hike out if they can't get them.
[07:54] pete: They are not ready/willing to look around if the named text isn't there.
[07:55] davepattern: ours make heavy use of the "people who borrowed this, also borrowed..." suggestions when there aren't copies available.
[07:55] CorpLibrarian: So very much a "this is what I will be tested on, this is what I will read" sort of mentality, pete?
[07:55] Linda Shippert: There was a great Alison Dechdel cartoon about never telling someone they "should" read something.
[07:57] pete: Very much so unfortunately, corp.
[07:57] pete: dave: it'd be nice if we had that facility.
[07:57] pete: And the use to make it work 😊
